

Resolution to Revise the Student Code of Conduct

WHEREAS AI usage may lead to academic misconduct, it is necessary to amend the definitions in Section 2.3 of the Student Code of Conduct; and

WHEREAS the Student Affairs Committee, Curriculum and Instruction Committee, and the Policy Committee have reviewed and supported the proposed changes from the ad hoc Academic Senate AI Committee;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that the Academic Senate approve the following revision to Section 2.3 of the Student Code of Conduct.

Revision to Section 2.3 (<https://doso.wayne.edu/conduct/academic-misconduct>):

2.3 “Cheating” means intentionally using or attempting to use, or intentionally providing or attempting to provide, unauthorized materials, information or assistance in any academic coursework. This includes using artificial intelligence (AI) tools/systems in academic coursework, except where such use has been authorized in advance by the instructor and disclosed through appropriate referencing or citation.

Cheating can take many forms, including but not limited to the following:

Collusion: Working with other student(s), when told not to do so or other than as authorized by your instructor, to complete any course work, in whole or in part. This includes using messaging services to exchange information or answers to any coursework.

Contract Cheating: Paying or soliciting an individual, private company, or other source, for the completion of any coursework (e.g., exams, papers, etc.), or parts of coursework. These include essay mills, auction platforms, commercial services for hire, and private parties (family, classmates, former students, tutors, etc.), even if not for money, but in exchange for favors or special privileges.

Other: Selling, giving, offering, or stealing all or part of a test or term paper or any other academic assignment or course materials, unauthorized use of resources, enlisting in the assistance of a substitute when taking exams, destroying another's work, threatening students or instructors, or any other misconduct identified in the course syllabus or other written information.
